

I can remember when the FCC protected the public's interests. The decline in the quality of radio and television, as stations are increasingly owned by companies that care not about broadcasting, not about informing the public, but simply about profit, has been breathtaking. The proposed rule changes will accelerated this change. The FCC has a public trust. It should exercise that trust and not weaken the rules on media ownership.